She secured a position in a hairdressing shop in Sixth avenue, and took a room with a family named Denmer, at No. 225 East Fifty eighth street. At the beginning of the duil season the girl lost her place. She was unable to secure employment, but bore her trouble uncomplainingly as her little money dribbled away.

On the Fourth of July, white walking through Fifty-eighth street, she attracted the attention of Joseph Ronan, a young clerk, living at No. 210, but a few loors from her dwelling. He spoke to her and by degrees learned at least part of her story.
